

Connexor & Lingway to enter a partnership agreement

Helsinki – December 18, 2003 - Connexor, a leading provider of multilingual language technology, today announced that it has entered into a partnership agreement with Lingway, a leading French company specializing in the conception and development of linguistic-based software products. Under this agreement, Lingway has licensed Machine text analysers for multiple languages for embedding in its knowledge management products.

“Adding Connexor technology to our products will improve our solutions by reinforcing their multilingual capacities” commented Bernard Normier, Lingway’s Chairman and CEO.

“It is an honour to us that the Lingway team, with its industrial experience and linguistic expertise, has chosen to use Connexor Machine in its products and solutions”, said Aro Voutilainen, CEO of Connexor. “This partnership contributes to the use of Connexor products especially in Western European markets. We look forward to a prosperous relationship with Lingway”.

About Connexor : Connexor, founded in 1997 by widely known researchers in language technology, is a software company that specializes in development and licensing of multilingual language technology for demanding IT and AI applications. Connexor’s customer base includes over a hundred software companies and research labs worldwide. The company has its main office at Helsinki, Finland and is on the Web at www.connexor.com.